Stellar Phoenix Linux Data Recovery is a professional data recovery tool that helps you recover lost partitions, remove RAID, RAID 0, RAID 5, RAID 6, RAID and all types of RAID, protect your RAID array with RAID 1, RAID 5, RAID 6. It also recovers lost NTFS, ext2, ext3, vfat and other file systems and other common file formats from hard drive, USB drive, and removable drives.

Q: foreach multidimensional array, do not know how to nest I want to do this: `$this->assign('news', $news); foreach ($news as $v1) { foreach ($v1 as $v2) { $v2['description'] = '--'; $v1['description'] = '--'; } }` but it is not working. I need to nest the array not just do `foreach ($v1 as $v2)` I tried `array_merge`, `array_replace`, use `array_walk` (notice that it's working except that it's replacing, I need to keep it empty). With every trial I get the error this is not an array. Any suggestion what is the right way to do that? EDIT : I have 3 arrays. `$news $v1 $v2 news = array(1 => array('title' => $title, 'photo' => $photo)); v1 = array(1 => array('title' => $title, 'photo' => $photo)); v2 = array(1 => array('title' => $title, 'photo' => $photo));` A: use `array_map` to change the values inside all elements of an array. `$this->assign('news', $news); foreach ($news as $v1) { $v1['description'] = array_map(function($n){return '--';}, $v1); }` Q: How to add custom image to overlay like google maps? I am new for android. I want to add custom overlay image like google maps. I searched

The expectation that the next president of the Football League will be voted on at the end of August is in the air. Whoever succeeds Peter Gant at League House, as the governing body is formally known, is expected to be announced within days, with the Labour Party eager to replace the increasingly Conservative-dominated Old Firm committee with a more left-leaning set of clubs. The last Labour leader, Paul Scally, came under pressure, and critics even began branding him the "victim of a stitch-up". That followed the previous Labour-dominated committee's decision to cancel the upcoming Glasgow v Aberdeen match at Hampden Park at the start of the 2015-16 season, amid concerns about violence, the welfare of players, fans and stewards, and the general atmosphere on match days. However, that decision was reversed, the game went ahead, and it was decided to increase the policing of Hampden. A BBC documentary about the row in which the Scottish police chief said that certain clubs had to "re-establish trust" did not help. The decision to stop the match when they were only a goal and a half away from victory, rather than risk a repeat of the 70-0 thrashing of their city neighbours in April 2014, was seen by some as pandering to the lower orders. Malky Mackay: Falkirk meet high hopes at Hampden Labour leader Jeremy Corbyn has promised that the Football League will be "funky" and in keeping with the times. But it is understood that, in the event of him winning the election, he would leave matters to the next chief executive, who must be in place by November, when the next season begins. It is a compromise that pleases everybody, or as
