
study was conducted in 2009 to identify the knowledge of the health personnel about HIV disease and the personnel's attitudes toward HIV-positive patients. A questionnaire was distributed to a random sample of 1,000 health personnel with direct contact with HIV-positive patients. The health personnel studied had a low level of knowledge about HIV disease and had doubts regarding HIV transmission. Their attitudes toward HIV-positive patients also showed a tendency toward stigmatization. The level of knowledge about HIV disease and the attitudes of the health personnel toward HIV-positive patients in Brazil require a continuous process of training and discussion of the relevant issues.
